"The music of the future," produced by the Telharmonic system of electrical dynamos and distributed to thousands of audiences at once, is becoming the talk of the city. Among the novel features of the performances in Telharmonic Hall, Thirtieth street and Broadway, for this week will be the representation by biograph of the actual process at the end of the line of telephoning for a musical selection, and having it "wired" instantly. As the full explanation of the wonderful process soon will be eliminated from the programme, all New Yorkers interested in this revolution in music should visit Telharmonic Hall at once. On Sunday evening the audience will witness the novel spectacle of hearing and seeing played the music for a religious service, which will be held simultaneously in the Hotel Imperial by the Rev. Henry Marsh Warren free to the public.
