The Seventh Week of Telharmony.
The general public is steadily gaining in realization of the wonders of Telharmonic music, seen and heard daily at Telharmonic Hall, Thirty-Ninth street and Broadway. Leading newspapers and magazines throughout the world have been discussing this veritable birth of a new art of music, in which the skilled artist has command of the greatest instrument in history, costing nearly a million dollars, and enabling the musician to give infinite variety of tone expression to thousands of audiences at once. The musical arc-lamp, in which the air itself is a literal musical instrument, still continues to awaken profound wonder, while the beautiful solo possibilities of Telharmonic music are shown in a new feature, introducing piano accompaniment. The recitals are given every afternoon as well as every evening, the daily hours being 3, 4:45, 8:30 and 9:45 p. m.
